Delivering Learning When Disaster Strikes

H1N1 virus, Hurricane Katrina, California wild fires. Many say it's a matter of when, not if. Will your academic institution be ready to keep your students learning during times of crisis?

Continuity of Learning is Vital

Whether it's a pandemic, ice storm, earthquake, campus violence, or other natural or manmade disaster, ensuring your organization is prepared is key to minimizing adverse impact for administrators, instructors, staff, students, and parents. That means you have to have a solid response and recovery plan in place in anticipation of school closings, staff and student absences, loss of infrastructure or facilities, and more.

Elluminate Can Help

At Elluminate, we've demonstrated our ability to deliver products and services on a global basis through engagements with the World Health Organization (WHO), Pan America Health Organization (PAHO), HELP (Hurricane Education Leadership Project), LINGOs (Learning for International Non-Governmental Organizations), and others.

Before, During, and After

Elluminate's No User Left Behind™ technology can be a critical component of disaster preparedness and recovery as well as continuity of learning. Before disaster strikes, Elluminate can help you plan, prepare, and train. Elluminate's enabling technology allows you to hold meetings, manage projects, provide training, rehearse procedures, and more.

You can also look to Elluminate to provide continued communication, collaboration, and education during an emergency, regardless of duration. From campus-wide notification to meetings with community partners to online classes and recorded tutorials, Elluminate can help you respond efficiently and effectively. Then, once the crisis is past, Elluminate can be part of a 21st Century learning environment for schools that face rebuilding.
